

CASE STUDY OF RANJIT SINGH

Outcome of continuous discussions

In village KWITI, the daughter in law of Ranjit Singh, ran away from home and lived with someone for 15 days. After that she returned home. Her family members and the rest of the villagers taunt her and ostracize her. When the activist got to know of this, he started talking to the villagers and explaining to them. In the end, this strategy was adopted that there would be continuous discussions with her father-in-law and to bring out a change in him. After that the villagers should be spoken to and it should be stated that now that there is a change in the father-in-laws behavior and that he has improved his behavior with his daughter-in-law. They all agreed that it is true that someone else does something wrong, and it is always the woman who is blamed. Now we will have to go deeper to understand such issues.

Therefore: After the changes in the father-in-law, the villagers also started changing.
